You are clearly ignorant of trademark and copyright law. As we have explained to you repeatedly, we do not care how much burdock root you sell, you cannot co-opt the ASIN we created under our name brand. You cannot claim to sell Maison Terre burdock root when you clearly do not.

We went through this last winter (or the winter before that) with another herb. We were in the right, you weren't, amazon removes your hostile and accusatory of fraudulent companies from your listings. They mark it in the books, and eventually you'll lose your account for these violations trying to create a monopoly. You cannot own a monopoly on a natural product that you do not manufacture. Even if in your little house shop you grew the herb, its still not manufacture. Manufacture means creating something from various items that is uniquely yours. Bayer knows this, as they don't sell "Willow Bark" because they know they can't claim to manufacture something that grows naturally. They isolate the chemicals from willow bark, add additives, and call it aspirin.

You know, I'm honestly shocked another "Eco" company would turn to such ridiculous tactics that big business does. Do we really threaten you by selling the same herb? really? aren't we all working together to try to promote healthier alternatives to people?

I understand that you simply do not understand that you shouldn't be putting "by Maison Terre" on these natural herbs, and actually should be listing the sources of your herbs, or leave them blank, because you'll go through millions trying to prove you are manufacturing something natural that grows on its own. I wouldn't challenge you if it was a mix, a ointment, a potpourri, an incense that you actually "created".

You must have alot of time on your hands to be bothered by such things. I'm sorry for you. You're wasting our time. Its a shame, as we apparently share lots in common and interests ... and seem to be like-minded. Except for your corporate greediness and desire for running monopolies.

by the way, selling of artifacts online is illegal, and I have reported that as well. So is running fake and multiple

Hello,

We still need more information about your complaint for the items at the end of this email.

Please clarify how these items infringe your rights by resubmitting your complaint with answers to these questions:

1. Are you the manufacturer?
2. Do you think that the items in your complaint do not match the product detail pages?
3. Do you think that your trademark appears on products that you do not manufacture?
4. Do you think that your trademark is used inappropriately on the product detail pages?
5. Have you placed test orders? If yes, provide the Amazon.com order numbers.
6. Kindly provide us your registered trademark number for verification.

You can resubmit your complaint using our online form (<http://www.amazon.com/gp/help/reports/infringement>). Use the Additional Information field to answer the questions.
